The public safety market in India has tremendous potential, with integrated security solutions playing an important role in refining security and strengthening law enforcement. In a bid to tap this growing market, NEC Corporation is offering a wide range of security and surveillance solutions which can be seamlessly integrated into new or existing security systems. The solutions include multi-biometric identification, access gates, video surveillance and behavior pattern analysis.

Speaking exclusively to CXOtoday, Tan Boon Chin, MD - Regional Competency Centre for Public Safety at NEC APAC said that in the wake of terrorism the need for public safety in India has increased and it is no different from any other country. He further added the government spending on public safety has constantly been on the rise world over. However, as compared to the developed nations, India, due to its wide geographical area and huge population deployment of public safety solutions is a daunting task.

In India security solutions are deployed with much fanfare, but over time due to negligence these systems become obsolete. We asked Rajiv Bhalla, Country Manager, NEC India to share his views on this matter to which he said it is the India as a country is evolving and this psyche of being reckless is gradually reducing as people become more responsible.

Both Chin and Bhalla agreed that considering the wide range of security and surveillance solutions NEC has to offer, they would definitely want to participate in the UIDAI project. Apart from the government, NEC believes the financial sector will also be one of the huge adopters of public safety solutions.
